

8. Data security You may only store the BBC content securely on your organisation's servers in the United Kingdom or the European Economic Area ('EEA') or on the cloud servers based in the UK or EEA of a reputable cloud services provider (but not anywhere else or in any cloud location). All access passwords must be kept safe and must only be shared with the people named on this form. You must tell BBC Information Security at information.security@bbc.co.uk immediately (and within 24 hours) if you know of, or suspect, that the BBC content or the personal data in the content has been used unlawfully or in a way that is not permitted in these terms, or is used by anyone other than you, or is damaged or lost. If requested by the BBC or a Supervisory Authority, you will provide reasonable assistance at your own expense.
9. FOIA and confidentiality If the BBC receives a request for information under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 ('FOIA') and requests your help in replying to it, you will give us your help at your cost within 5 business days (Monday to Friday except UK bank holidays) of asking. The BBC alone decides how to reply to requests it receives. If you receive a FOIA request about the BBC or the BBC content, you must tell the BBC straightaway; you must not reply to it yourself (unless your organisation is subject to FOIA: tell the BBC when you start the Project if your organisation is subject to FOIA. The BBC will give reasonable assistance with any request for BBC information you receive under FOIA).
- The password or username we give you to gain access to our content (and anything else we mark as confidential or you ought to know if confidential) is the BBC's confidential information and you must not tell anyone else about it or use it for any purpose other than the Project. If you want to use our confidential information for anything else, you must get our written permission first.
10. Machine Learning (ML)/Artificial Intelligence (AI): when you use the BBC's content for the Project, you must adhere to AI/ML ethics principles that include designing, developing and implementing ML/AI systems responsibly, avoiding discrimination and unintentional bias and unequal treatment of users, and transparency about ML services and data models.
11. What you have to do: use the content only in accordance with these rules, and display it accurately. Add a credit (if it doesn't already have one) to show where you got the content from (e.g. "BBC © copyright content reproduced courtesy of the British Broadcasting Corporation"). If the BBC suffers any loss or damage from any act, omission or information coming from you or your organisation in relation to this Project, your organisation (including you) will be liable to the BBC to the fullest extent possible at law for that loss or damage suffered by the BBC.
12. A thing we have to say. Apart from what we're responsible for when there's a mishap, we're not liable for anything that happens to you if you use our content.
13. Mishaps. We take great care to make our content the best it can be. So if something does go wrong, we are responsible only if our negligence causes death or injury; Otherwise, we're not liable for anything that happens if: you rely on advice, data, commentary, opinions or any other content; there are errors, omissions, interruptions, delays, bugs or viruses; we turn off or remove content; the thing that happens couldn't reasonably have been foreseen; the thing that happens wouldn't usually result from the mishap; or you and we hadn't agreed that this thing would probably happen in the event of a mishap.
14. And finally. These BBC terms replace all previous agreements between you and us about using this content for this Project and no other BBC terms of use apply. This is a contract between your organisation (including you) and us, and you must not transfer it to anyone else. No one else has any rights to enforce its terms. Any changes to its terms must be made in writing and signed by both of us. English law governs these BBC terms, and only English courts can make judgments about them. Our content is made available to you by the British Broadcasting Corporation, a public Corporation incorporated by Royal Charter under the laws of the United Kingdom whose principal office is at Broadcasting House, Portland Place, London W1A 1AA.
